

Our Unknown Future

COVID-19 did much to disrupt and alter our current missions in teaching, research and extension. We have yet to fully realize the impact it will have on future students.

High school juniors like Corvallis High School's Cecilia Pérez traditionally would have been taking their SATs and ACTs this past spring, and may even have been visiting college campuses to start thinking about applying in the fall for the 2021-2022 academic year. That all changed as a result of COVID-19. All standardized testing has been cancelled at most universities, including OSU, and the College of Agricultural Sciences moved to virtual tours and social media meet-ups for prospective students.
